Who we are

The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists is a nonprofit that provides authoritative reporting on nuclear risk, climate change, and disruptive technologies, such as advancements in bioresearch and artificial intelligence. What connects these issues is a driving belief that because humans created them, we can control them.

In 1945, the Bulletin was founded by Manhattan Project scientists who “could not remain aloof to the consequences of their work.” Albert Einstein established the Bulletin’s Board of Sponsors with J. Robert Oppenheimer as its first chair. Nearly 80 years later, the Bulletin continues to equip the public, policymakers, and scientists with the information needed to reduce man-made threats to human existence.

“The Bulletin has become widely recognized in America and abroad, both as the best and most complete source of authoritative information.”

Albert Einstein
Co-founder of the Bulletin’s Board of Sponsors, 1949

A trusted source of information for nearly 80 years
With early leadership including luminaries like Albert Einstein and J. Robert Oppenheimer, the Bulletin has upheld a legacy of elevating experts above the noise and providing perspectives that have shaped policy and politics.
“The scientific transparency that the Bulletin provides is so necessary, especially in a time where climate misinformation runs rampant.”

Jasmine Banks
Bulletin contributor

“The Bulletin’s mission is as urgent today as it was when Albert Einstein and Robert Oppenheimer helped found it.”

Christine Todd Whitman
Former Administrator of the EPA

“Essential, informative, and trustworthy—the Bulletin helps readers understand man-made threats to human existence and how to help combat them.”

William J. Perry
Former US Secretary of Defense

“In an era of misinformation, I trust I can go to the Bulletin for reliable information, diverse viewpoints, and scientific analysis.”

Molly Hurley
